

✦ God talk for secular ears ✦

In this course we will explore why so many religious proclamations fall on deaf ears and how the rise of secularism may be part of a deep religious experience, we will learn the basics of secular language, and we will discover how the Good News of God, Christ, and the Spirit might sound when spoken from within the language and assumptions of secular culture. That could be a revelation for secular people as much as for ourselves.

Participants can expect to be affirmed in their faith as well as to be challenged to explore the disturbing realities behind declining attendance, and to find within that painful experience, the essence of the Gospel shining through. We will experience how that will give both believers and secular people new life and joy and hope in their church commitment and in their personal lives.

Participants should be prepared to engage with and critique Harold's presentations, to share with other participants their own experiences of secularism, and work together to design a liturgy of word and art to express the faith in secular language.

Come to talk, come to listen, come to question, come to share, come to live, come to joy. Open to all, spiritual and secular, young and old, committed or curious or neither.
